This is the attachment marked "KH-1" referred to in the witness statement of Professor Kelsey Lee Hegarty dated 5 August 2015.

Professor Kelsey Hegarty Career Summary

I lead a Researching Abuse and Violence Program in the Primary Care Research Unit and have built significant capacity and reputation of high quality innovative research in the field of domestic violence, general practice and health. My program of research is in three areas – definition and prevalence of domestic violence (DV); mental and physical health consequences of DV and thirdly, prevention and responding to DV in community and health care settings. My productivity is shown in that I have attracted over 7 million dollars in competitive funding as a chief investigator (1.7 million as CIA- NHMRC and ARC); published more than 100 scholarly works, including 84 peer-reviewed journal papers, 9 first authored book chapters, a book, published abstracts, reports and manuals. The quality of my output is shown by publications in high impact journals such as The Lancet, BMJ, JAMA, Soc. Sci. Med., Br J Psych. and BJGP; and an international research book in 2006 on Intimate partner abuse for Health professionals. Recognition of this output as an international expert is shown by invitations to undertake editorials for The Lancet and JAMA, be Temporary Advisor to the World Health Organisation and participate in WHO guidelines group; Advisor to the United Nations on gender issues; and as a keynote speaker at national and international conferences. I also contribute to intervention knowledge through my involvement in three international Cochrane systematic reviews. In 2011, I was The Sir Benjamin Meaker Visiting Professor at Bristol University. In 2012, I was awarded distinguished paper from the North American Primary Care Research Group and best paper at the Primary Health Care Research conference. I mentor staff and currently am supervisor for 7 higher degree students, and previously had 9 students completed.

My first significant contribution to the field has been the development and validation of a comprehensive multidimensional measure of DV, providing the initial foundation to my strong national and international reputation as an expert on measuring domestic violence. The Composite Abuse Scale is seen as “the gold standard” in the field (MacMillan, 2009). For my PhD I developed this measure, which was the first validated multidimensional measure of domestic violence and is now available in 10 languages. It is currently being used by researchers from Canada, United States of America, Russia, Spain, Japan, Malaysia, The Netherlands and the United Kingdom. It was published in the Centres for Disease Control Compendium of DV measures in 2006. The Composite Abuse Scale is used in the Australian Longitudinal Women’s Health Study as their measure of violence. Seven papers were published from my PhD project in international and national journals. The two key papers on the development and validation of the Composite Abuse Scale, my major original contribution to the field, (cited 107 times, scopus 12th May). In addition to the use of the Composite Abuse Scale worldwide, I have demonstrated major shortcomings in measurement tools for DV, thereby shifting the debates towards the pursuit of new theoretical models to understand DV. In addition to my contribution to theoretical debates, I am also acknowledged as an expert in technical issues associated with using scales to measure complex issues and surveys to research sensitive areas. I run a short course annually on survey design and I have led workshops on researching sensitive issues at national and international conferences.

I have led new initiatives that have changed policy and practice. I engage well with the practitioner and community sector having strong links with the profession and women’s services e.g. Chair of Domestic Violence Resource Centre, co-Chair of RACGP Special Interest Group on Abuse and Violence, Committee Member of WONCA Special Interest Group on Family Violence, Committee member of Nexus community health board and on the research group of the White Ribbon Foundation. Strong engagement is further demonstrated by my ARC linkage grants, expert court witness work, government funded consultancies, my influence on policy in the general practice and domestic violence field and my frequent invitations to present at public forums and in the media. I have strong international engagement with the World Health Organisation, a Canadian Institute of Health Research gender, violence and mental health network and the United Nations Family Planning. I am also Editor in Chief of the Asia Pacific Family Medicine journal.

I have shown excellence in research (Program leader of Abuse and Violence multidisciplinary team), teaching (Postgraduate Diploma of Primary care Nursing) and provided service to the wider profession and community. I have maintained clinical practice (0.2) fulfilling all continuing professional development requirements. I would like to state that I have worked part time (0.4- 0.5), for all my academic life, undertaking leadership roles in teaching, administration and research.
