

* I think that the police should keep the victims in the loop in regards to sentencing of the D.V perpetrator. When the respondent on an A.V.O gets released from custody or gets bailed etc, the police should inform the victim.

Also the court cases for Domestic Violence cases should be heard in a reasonable amount of time.

I have been waiting for years for the case against my D.V perpetrator to be heard. He has been bailed from prison and I was never informed. I think communication between victims & police should be better & should be a priority.

* There needs to be more funding for refuge places for women with children, plus more support & counselling for people leaving violent relationships.

— Anonymous